Car Free Day Background

- First took place in Europe in 1995, went global in 2000.
- Corresponds with Europe's international mobility week occurring September 16-22, celebrating sustainable transportation.
- For at least one day during mobility week, cities set aside an area solely for pedestrians, cyclists and public transit that is ordinarily used by cars.
- Today, Car Free Day is celebrated in 1,500 cities in 40 countries.

Car-Free Days

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

This article may contain original research. Please improve it by verifying the claims made and adding references. Statements consisting only of original research may be removed. More details may be available on the talk page. (September 2009)

A Car Free Day encourages motorists to give up their car for a day. Organized events are held in some cities and countries. September 22 is World Car Free Day.^[1] According to The Washington Post, the event "promotes improvement of mass transit, cycling and walking, and the development of communities where jobs are closer to home and where shopping is within walking distance".^[1]

The events, which vary by location, give motorists and commuters an idea of their locality with fewer cars. While projects along these lines had taken place from time to time on an ad hoc basis starting with the 1973 oil crisis, it was only in October 1994 that a structured call for such projects was issued in a keynote speech by Eric Britton at the International Ciudades Accesibles (Accessible Cities) Conference held in Toledo (Spain). Thursday: A Breakthrough Strategy for Reducing Car Dependence in Cities

Within two years the first Days were organized in Reykjavik (Iceland), Bath (Britain) and La Rochelle (France), and the informal World Car Free Days Consortium was organized in 1995 to support Car-Free Days world wide. The first national campaign was inaugurated in Britain by the Environmental Transport Association in 1997, the French followed suit in 1998 as In town, without my car! and was established as a Europe-wide initiative by the European Commission in 2000. In the same year the Commission enlarged the program to a full European Mobility Week which now is the major focus of the Commission, with the Car-Free Day part of a greater new mobility whole. Also in 2000, car free days went global with a World Carfree Day program launched by Carbusters, now World Carfree Network, and in the same year the Earth Car Free Day collaborative program of the Earth Day Network and the World Car Free Days collaborative.

While considerable momentum has been achieved in terms of media coverage, these events turn out to be difficult to organize to achieve real success (perhaps requiring significant reorganization of the host city's transportation arrangement) and even a decade later there is considerable uncertainty about the usefulness of this approach. The sine qua non of success is the achievement of broad public support and commitment to change. By some counts by advocates (disputed), more than a thousand cities worldwide organized "Days" during 2005.

CARPPOOLING, A SOLUTION TO HIGH GAS PRICES

As driving alone to work becomes acutely more expensive for your employees, some commuters have figured out that carpooling saves money, and lots of it. Record high gas prices have made driving alone to work the most expensive it has ever been, turning reasonable commutes into costly ones and longer commutes into budget-busters. A common point of contention among drive alone commuters has been the sky-rocketing cost of getting to work. High gas prices have caused many drivers previously reluctant to ride-share, to seriously consider the practice. "We've seen gas prices reach the breaking point for many commuters in the Washington region," said Nicholas Ramfoss, Commuter Connections Director. The practice of sharing a ride has gone beyond what our society once looked at as simply an environmental feel good, to an economical and pragmatic way of getting to and from the workplace. "Carpooling is fast becoming a bona fide

Uncar For A Day

Wednesday, September 22, might seem a long way from now, but it's a day that can unite employees in a common cause with other travelers in the Washington region and around the globe. Employees in the region are invited to encourage employees to take part in Car Free Day, an annual worldwide event in which people are called to action to get around without their cars.

Employees are asked to take the pledge and forgo driving that day and instead use transit, bicycling, walking or teleworking. Employees that find it difficult to go without a car can participate by going "car-lite" and carpooling. Using any of these alternative transportation modes will pay dividends in the form of less stress, a greener environment and, hopefully save some time and money.

Those who pledge to be car free on September 22 and register will automatically be entered for a chance to win great raffle prizes. Some of last year's prizes included an iPod nano, Washington Nationals tickets, Smart Trip passes loaded with fare, store gift cards, and free Segway tours. Employees can pledge to Uncar for a Day at www.carfreemetrod.com

Find Your Match
For help finding a carpool partner, employees can try Commuter Connections' free real-time ride-matching system at commuterconnections.org. The easy to use system can search for other commuters who have expressed interest in carpooling/vanpooling and who may live and work in the same area.

Be sure to watch for details about special Car Free Day events planned within your business community. Last year's event in downtown Washington D.C. held at 7th & F Streets NW closed the street to traffic and offered music, giveaways, and more. Check www.carfreemetrod.com for updates and information on special events in D.C., Maryland and Virginia.

More than 6,200 people pledged to be car-free for the day in 2009. So, take this year's car free challenge and do your part to help improve air quality, cut congestion and reduce our collective carbon footprint on September 22.

Help Make Car Free Day a Success

- Offer a one-day subsidy to cover transit or vanpool fares for participating employees.
- Forge a mutual agreement with neighboring employers to work together to facilitate car-free commuting for your entire workforce.
- Hold an on-site transportation fair to educate and motivate your employees for a car-free life.
- Post Car Free Day fliers and other information throughout your workplace.
- Offer a free gift or comp time to all employees who participate that day.
- Print up t-shirts that say, "EMPLOYER NAME is going car-free on September 22!"
- Use email and intranet communication to periodically remind employees to take the Car Free Day pledge at www.carfreemetrod.com.
- Give an award to the top three employees who commute the farthest without driving alone.
- Proclaim September 22 as your official unofficial "Telework Day" for all eligible employees.
- Call Commuter Connections at 800-745-RIDE for assistance with planning ahead for Car Free Day 2010.

WASHINGTON REGION TO PARTICIPATE IN INTERNATIONAL CAR FREE DAY SEPTEMBER 22

On September 22, 2008, the Washington metropolitan region will join over 1,500 towns and cities in 40 countries for "Car Free Day." The initiative will give residents, commuters, and visitors a glimpse of what the area might be like with fewer vehicles crowding the streets.

Car Free Day began as a street party in Bath, England in 1995. Due to its success, English transportation officials decided to expand the program into an annual event, and the European Union and some in Eastern Europe. All events are held on the same day, September 22. In Europe, town center streets will be closed to traffic all dancing, public art, and of the normally auto-laden s
