This website presents the proposed significant changes to the long-range transportation plan, under consideration for adoption by the Transportation Planning Board (TPB) for 2006. The plan includes all "regionally significant" transportation projects and programs that are planned for the Washington metropolitan region by 2030. Each year the plan is updated to include new projects and programs, and analyzed to ensure that it meets federal requirements relating to air quality and funding.

Also on this website is the core information from the currently adopted long-range transportation plan, adopted in October 2005. Hundreds of projects are included, ranging from simple highway landscaping to billion-dollar highway and transit projects. Once adopted, the CLRP will include both the proposed significant changes and the currently adopted projects and studies. Information on the currently adopted plan, including forecast changes in land use
