	On August 4, 2005, the Federal Aviation Administration issued a notice of proposed rulemaking that, if implemented, would permanently restrict a wide ban of airspace over the Washington area. The FAA proposal would codify flight restrictions in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area. The restricted area would replace the current air defense identification zone (ADIZ). It would receive a brand-new designation, "National Defense Airspace," and cover nearly 2,000 square miles around Washington, D.C., extending to an altitude of 18,000 feet. The FAA has requested that comments be received no later than November 2, 2005. The Committee will be briefed on the proposed rule making.
